

Educational Attainment, Employment, and Public Opinion in the EU: An interdisciplinary analysis

Are there predicting factors for positive public opinion of the European Union?

Figure 1: Photo from carnegiecouncil.org

This website seeks to show the relationship between employment rates, educational attainment, and public opinion of the E.U. This information can be beneficial in determining the overall demographics of Euro-skeptic or distrustful Europeans, especially considering the rise of populism and nationalist ideology in Europe.

This website uses data from Eurostat and Eurobarometer to create visualizations demonstrating the relationship between the variables in the hope to provide context to this ongoing issue in Europe. If there's data to show a pattern in the demographics of those who are distrustful, policy development and citizens initiatives can be created to address their grievances.